Mario: I think Camden Market was great. There are so many things to see, you don't know where to start with your shopping! I bought two super T-shirts and a couple of CDs, very cheap, and from bands that you don't get in Austria, and a necklace as a present for my girlfriend at home, and – well, with the rest of my money I got myself something to eat at a Chinese food stall. Sweet and sour pork with rice – very nice, and only £ 4.00!

Theresa: Me and my girlfriend, we just couldn't pull ourselves away from all those crazy boots and shoes and sandals ... we tried more than 20 pairs, I think, only to find out that they were all too expensive at 60 or 70 or even 80 pounds a pair. So what I finally bought was a really cute golden handbag which was just £9.90. And I sent a funny postcard to my teacher in Austria with the picture of a frog on it. And you know I don't eat any meat so we had lunch at this vegetarian take-away, which was absolutely delicious ...

Eva: Camden Market was wonderful! Look at my new boots – you can't get any like these in Austria, and £60.00 is okay I think. But that was almost all my money, so with the rest I got myself a cheap wristband and a matching necklace and a curry at a Thai food shop, which was lovely. I even went into one of those tattoo studios, but of course my parents would kill me if I came back with one of those so I was just looking at the designs. And Andrew – can we PLEASE go there one more time ...

Robert: So what did I buy? A small handbag for my lovely sister, two Elvis Presley CDs for my dad, and for me – well, there was this great COLDPLAY T-shirt but it was £30.00 and so I finally thought I'd better save the money for my last week in London. I bought a book on tattoo designs in a piercing and tattoo studio because my sister wants to have one done. And the food in the Chinese takeaway was fantastic, much better than burgers and chips.

SHOPPING IN CAMDEN MARKET

A group of Austrian teenagers is staying at a language school in London. Andrew, their teacher, has taken them to Camden Market. On the next day his students have to tell him about their time in Camden.

First study the photo page with the Camden shops carefully.

Then listen to the students. In which shops did the teenagers spend money and buy something?

Write the correct letters in the grid.

You will hear the recording twice.
